Every Picture Tells a Story

For more than four years, photo-journalist Matty Roth has shared his insider's view of civil war. Of course, he hasn't done this alone—he's had plenty of help from Brian Wood and Riccardo Burchielli, whose skills with words and pictures have made his chronicle, DMZ, one of Vertigo's most popular series.

This month, Matty Roth's saga reaches a landmark with the release of DMZ #50, and to celebrate that anniversary, Brian Wood is abandoning the long-form story for a series of standalone short pieces. Wood explained the reason behind the change. "Well, it's the anniversary, and we wanted to do something special, especially considering we totally forgot to do anything for the #25 milestone. Fifty issues of a Vertigo book is something that is pretty rare these days, so yeah, a celebration/pat on the back for everyone involved.

"I keep using the word 'celebration' also because I wanted this issue to be fairly upbeat," Wood said. "The main storyline in DMZ is currently in a really grim place, so I figured something out-of-story would be nice. And getting a bunch of great guests artists in as well, a celebration. We're presenting the stories as 'classic' DMZ tales, as taken from main character Matty Roth's field notes."

Wood has called on a variety of illustrative talents to supply the visuals for this extra-length issue. "Regular artist Riccardo Burchielli has an eight page story, as well as the cover, and Ryan Kelly is also on board—he drew DMZ #s 42-44, a very well-received run. Rebekah Isaacs is in—she's drawing my upcoming DV8 book at Wildstorm. We also have Jim Lee, Fabio Moon, Dave Gibbons, John Paul Leon (current DMZ cover artist), Eduardo Risso, Philip Bond, and Lee Bermejo."

DMZ #50 is a forty-page issue, so it's safe to assume that with this many artists involved, each piece must be relatively brief. "That's right," Wood said. "We have a couple of eight-pagers, a couple of four-pagers, and a whole slew of single pagers, sort of like what you saw in the old Transmetropolitan specials—not pinups, but a couple paragraphs of writing and an illustration to go with it."

Does Wood approach these shorter pieces differently than he does a longer story arc? "I have a lot of experience with short stories," Wood said, "although typically not this short. I Just thought of unanswered questions, things readers have asked me about the DMZ, things not yet covered in the main storyline. I tried to answer several of them within these little short stories. They are dense with information—but, like I said before, lighter in tone than what's typical for the book."

Will DMZ #50 offer newcomers an entry point that will bring them "up to speed" on the premise of the series? "I think so," Wood said. "At the absolute very least this issue should really make a new reader curious. There will be things that only DMZ readers will get—certain references or characters—but its not going to be entirely inaccessible. I hope retailers can use it to get new readers interested."

For readers who'd like to have some idea what they're getting into prior to reading DMZ #50, Wood offers a synopsis of the series. "In broad strokes, the DMZ is what the island of Manhattan is called in this near-future Second American Civil War," Wood said. "Matty Roth is a rookie journalist who gets stranded in this blighted city and, seeing a golden opportunity, starts to report on what the city is like under siege, what everyday life is like for the residents trapped there. The series has been running for over four years, so the story has grown quite a bit, but that's the set-up."

Do we know what led to a second civil war—or does the reason for the war ultimately not matter? "We do, a bit," Wood said. "There is background in the second volume, and then a bit in the fourth and fifth, and there will be some new revelations in this DMZ #50—but for the most part, you said it: it really doesn't matter. The series opened with the war already well into the quagmire phase, and its always been about what is life like now, not what happened five or ten years in the past that set events in motion. So I try to supply information when I feel it's necessary, but its not really the point of the book."

What part does New York play in this civil war? "New York is the prize both sides are fighting over, but neither can fully conquer. It's a lawless land, a symbol of an unwinnable war, yet the war grinds on."

Matty's spent a fair amount of time in the DMZ so far; is he still a more-or-less neutral observer, or is he beginning to take sides in the conflict? "Yeah, this is stuff that happens later on, but if Matty is one thing, he's imperfect," Wood said. "He was never a proper journalist.. he literally fell into the job. So he constantly struggles to find objectivity and integrity, but is always getting in way over his head, or picking sides and screwing up. Maybe it's impossible for someone in his situation to be entirely detached. He's living in the warzone, just like everyone else around him."

Wars don't go on forever, however, and neither will Roth's odyssey through the DMZ. "It's a finite series," Wood said, "and the plan pretty much from the start is for it to be a six-year series, like Transmet or Y—The Last Man or Preacher, the Vertigo classics. Right now, I think it'll be more like seventy issues; I'm currently outlining the final story arcs."

So does the war end when Matty's story ends? "Wow, that would be a spoiler!" Wood joked, adding, "I can't really say—but I can say that Matty, by now, is probably so intrinsically linked to this conflict that their fates, whatever they may be, will be one and the same."

When it comes to finding inspiration for DMZ, Wood rarely has to look much further than the news, it seems. Just how much influence do real-world events have on the world of DMZ? "They influence it entirely," Wood said. "I pitched the book back in 2003 or 2004, when the Iraq War was really getting underway and it was all over the news and on everyone's mind. Over the years, it's been an ongoing concern to keep the book current and relevant, but fortunately—or should I say unfortunately?—I've never run out of real-life inspiration. I've also done a lot of research into past wars, read lots of journalists accounts, so DMZ is not just an allegory for any one thing... its more universal than that."

After the multiple-short-story approach for DMZ #50, Wood returns to longer story arcs beginning with the next issue. "We had a huge reveal in DMZ #49 that I don't want to spoil for people who are reading the book in trade," Wood said, "but with DMZ #51 we're starting the third arc of the overall DMZ story. Matty was seriously compromised in the last arc and the city stands, literally, on the brink. He's gotta finally step up and get it together."

DMZ #50, an extra-length standalone issue priced at $3.99, is scheduled for release this week. The first 41 issues of the series are currently available in seven collected editions, all of which are in print, which means that readers can take a trip into Wood's DMZ any time they'd like.

Ring 'Em Up

Remember all the excitement that DC created with their "Blackest Night ring event" back in November? Well, get ready for Ring Redux, as DC has plans to offer two more rings in April. The release of The Flash #1 will be accompanied by a Flash Ring, while the release of Green Lantern #53 (the first Brightest Day-bannered issue) will be accompanied by a Green Lantern Ring.

""These rings are not only very cool, but they're a big thank-you to our fans, who've helped make Blackest Night a huge success," DC's Dan DiDio said. "We're hoping we can all keep the momentum going once the Blackest Night ends and the Brightest Day begins."

"One of the many great Flash Facts about DC Comics is that they actually do support the retailers with promotions like this that not only make our whole business a bit more fun, but also bring the promotion to every single reader," Flash and Green Lantern writer/superstar Geoff Johns added. "Of course, the proof is in the content and I couldn't be prouder of the work Francis Manapul and I are doing on The Flash and Doug Mahnke and I are creating on Green Lantern. Thanks to everyone, retailers and readers, for an amazing 2009 and here's to an even better 2010!"

Look for Flash #1 and the Flash Ring on April 14th, while Green Lantern #53 and the Green Lantern Ring will follow on April 21st.

•Boom Studios has announced a new imprint, Boom Town, which will focus on "high quality, lit-oriented comics," Boom's Chip Mosher said. The first offerings will include several projects originally published by the now-defunct Kitchen Sink Press, including R. Crumb Trading Cards and I Thought You Would Be Funnier, a collection of Shannon Wheeler gag cartoons rejected by New Yorker Magazine.

•Brian Bolland has been tapped to supply the variant cover art for Green Lantern Corps #45—and what a variant cover it is!

•If you're not currently reading Tiny Titans (and you should be—it's a great series for readers of all ages!), you might want to give Tiny Titans #25 a close look, because it's co-written by none other than Blackest Night superstar scribe Geoff Johns. This story, which guest-stars Superboy and his bizarro brother Match, should be in comic shops next week.

There's never been a more American town than Sparta. In Sparta they believe in life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness through treachery, blackmail and murder - just like the Maestro taught them as he learned it from the U.S. President. Sparta is such a great place that no one ever thinks of leaving. It's been three years since anyone's tried, and he was never heard from again…until today. Today, Godfrey McLaine, the greatest quarterback in Sparta's history, has returned bigger, taller and redder than when he left. He's also armed with a secret that will expose the rotten core of the American Dream in this compelling series by David Lapham & Johnny Timmons
